Tanzania

Golder Trust
for Orphans

Food Water Shelter manages sustainable and eco-friendly children's villages offering education, social and health facilities for orphans, vulnerable women and their children. In 2008/2009 they employed 30 local farmers to build a village called Kesho Leo (meaning "Tomorrow Today"), that has become home to 16 women and 80 children. They offer early-learning education, health, social skilling and leadership programmes preparing children for successful integration into the community.

We build early learning, eco-friendly children's villages and big, bright futures

The Children's Village consists of:

- Sleeping bomas under one continuous roof that are designed to maximise rainwater collection. Separate rooms each accommodate five children and one house mama.
- Nurse's medicine room which will eventually become a health clinic for community use.
- African-style kitchen area complete with biogas cookers, passive cooling cupboards and an open-air dining room.
- Early learning and community centre, composting toilets, water-saving shower rooms and a grey-water laundry, secure lock-up container and computer storage room.
- 45 rainwater tanks fed by roof collection, a water aquifer (underground water storage) and an organic permaculture farm which produce organic vegetables and livestock.

The Volunteer Village:

A volunteer village was built nearby to include accommodation, an office and a store for food staples like maize, soya beans and lentils.
